

Air Waves

WNTC has resumed its activities at its usual dial number of 640 kilocycles. Many persons have been wondering just how the station operates and who operates it. The staff consists of students from both colleges under the leadership of Richard C. Meyer, station manager.

To become a regular staff member of the station, a person must first see the personal manager, Vaughn Weidel, who will interview the prospective member and talk about the job that is best suited for him. He is then sent to the manager of the department in which he will work. The departments are: Engineering, under Ed Hawxhurst; control room operators, under Alfred Mahlmann; programming, under James Carr; and recording librarians and typists, under Jean Walsoe.

The managers of the department to which the person is sent again interviews the person sent to him and they agree on just what is to be done. He then goes through the proper procedures outlined by the department manager who assigns a specific time and work to be done by the person.

As the station goes "on the air," the control room operator plays the theme, the announcer reads the list of programs for the evening which have been prepared by the programming department, and the records for the next show (previously pulled by the record librarian) are played.

The students for the live shows have been arriving and the day manager has been showing the students just where to await for their time to go "on the air." All these people are very necessary to make the radio station function as a unit and give the listening audience the pleasure it receives over the air from station WNTC.

For further information, just drop up to the station. It is located on the second floor of the maintenance building behind the Crane House.
